In this country apples are generally apples, particularly if they are grown in this state and are of the pippin variety. The other day we received a box of pippins from Philip C. Rand of Meridan, and they were so evidently apples that we inquired of him about them. Part of his reply runs thus:

This tradition about Thomas Jefferson and Queen Victoria is as lame as many of the stories told about the apple, Jefferson having finished his diplomatic work in Paris and London in 1789, and Queen Victoria not having been born until 1819. But there is no lameness about the Albemarie pippin. It is as fruity and cheering as good wine—not the sickly champagnes, but as Chauteau Yquem or Chambertin. It is an apple that would have graced the garden of Eden, and that would not have to make excuses to the peach of have to make excuses to the peach of have to make excuses to the peach of Khorasan.
